Publisher: SoftDoc Solutions Corp. Version: 3.0.0 (Win 8,1 x64) Language Packs can be installed and uninstalled without affecting the operating system. The Chinese version is not available in any other languages, but if you are interested in a Chinese version in your native language, see Windows Language Packs. In Windows 8, a new Update is released as soon as the OS has reached at least Windows Update/OS version level update Windows 8.1/update version number.1 After the update, the language pack for that version of Windows 8 may not be included in the Windows 8 language pack tool. The new language pack is downloaded separately and installed during the setup of Windows 8. Windows Language Packs Language Packs in Windows 8 are created for each language supported by Windows and are written to the registry in the HKLM subfolder of Software Distribution. Language Packs were first introduced in Windows 95, and it was possible to install a language pack for any language supported by Windows 95. To avoid side-effects with the original language pack, Microsoft created a new way to install language packs in Windows 8. First, a new language pack is created for each language supported by Windows 8. When a user needs to install a language pack for Windows 8, the current language pack is first removed from the system. Then, the new language pack is downloaded and installed. Note In Windows 8, a Windows Update/OS level update must be reached before the language pack can be installed. When the language pack is installed, it is written to the registry in HKLM SoftwareDistribution.

To make it easier to test the language packs, there are many ways to install a language pack for a different language. For example, you can install the Japanese language pack from the Windows 8 Japanese language pack tool or the Japanese version of the Windows 8.1 Update 2919355. It is also possible to install a different language pack, but all the previous languages for the OS version you are currently running will be removed. You cannot install the Chinese version of the Windows 8.1 Update 2919355 on a version of Windows 8 before Windows Update reached Windows 8.1/update version number. To install the Chinese version of the Update 2919355 on Windows 8. You must download the updated language packs (Windows 8.1 Update 2919355 Chinese), unzip and install them.
